The five steps to risk assessment
The majority of organisations claim to conduct risk assessments. However, according to research commissioned by the HSE, these assessments are not always comprehensive and some organisations, especially smaller employers, find the process challenging. Alice Sinclair discusses the findings.
- 14 FEATURE
Fighting back against AIDS
Around 26 million people in sub-Saharan Africa are HIV positive. The strategy of firms in managing workforces with HIV infection in high-prevalence areas is very different from their approach in low-prevalence regions. Paul Suff reports.
- 20 FEATURE
Latex prosecution for NHS trust
An NHS trust has been prosecuted by the HSE for failing to control exposure to latex, despite complying fully with an improvement notice. John Ballard was in court.
- 24 FEATURE
100 years of ICOH
OH at Work reports on the centenary congress of the International Commission on Occupational Health. The first of a two-part feature includes papers on the ageing workforce, hazards faced by child workers and the European Stress impact study.
- 28 DILEMMA
Clinical information
The recent FOM ethics guidance states that employers rarely need to see clinical information about an employee or job applicant. But can OH practitioners really provide sensible advice to employers without some reference to an individual's actual medical condition and its relevance to work? Occupational physician Tony Williams and DRC lawyer Chris Benson take the stand.
- 30 EXPERT WITNESS
Pre-employment screening
In advance of the forthcoming OH at Work survey on pre-employment health screening, Diana Kloss explains the relevant legislation and case law and discusses how OH professionals can help employers meet their legal duties.
