Northern Ireland trauma bill could cost millions
 The High Court identified 'systematic failures' by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in failing to take action on OH advice to support police officers exposed to trauma at work. Its ruling could mean up to 5,500 police officers and former officers claiming damages for psychological and psychiatric injuries sustained during the civil conflict in Northern Ireland.
- 15 FEATURE
New approaches to stress at work
 Approaches to tackling stress at work are too closely wedded to mainstream theories of demand-control and effort-reward imbalance, argues Simon Pickvance. Better understanding of our biopsychosocial needs at work could improve workplace stress management.
